Our main theme: an ambitious challenge

The annual conference in Bled has a very ambitious theme: to discuss the development and role of level 5 qualifications in different countries and their relationship with other parts of tertiary education systems such as academic HE, professional HE, apprenticeships and the unregulated and informal sectors.

This is a challenge for all providers and policy makers, and arguably there is a need to build bridges between these sectors through formal agreements and improved mutual understanding to meet the tertiary education needs of all learners.

For example, using qualification frameworks, credit transfer schemes, recognition of prior learning and bridging courses to allow learners to climb and scaffold around the tertiary education system without undue barriers and restrictions.

It is only by creating this type of system, aligned with other investment and reform measures, that youth unemployment can be tackled and a fairer and more tolerant Europe re-formed.

The EU 'modernisation of higher education' agenda rightly asks providers programme formation to take more account of labour markets, the world of work, work-based learning and developing better employability skills for graduates; and for barriers between the traditional sectors to become transparent and permeable.

And it will be providers and practitioners who will have the role of implementing these changes.

In Bled we will discuss these and associated issues with participants in plenary sessions and several of the workshops.

In the meantime: read below recent comments from James Calleja, Cedefop Director at the 40th anniversary conference of the European University Institute (EUI) in Florence on 28 October.

Higher VET parallel to HE?

"Higher vocational education and training (VET) and university degrees are parallel universes that can be enriched by greater cooperation and convergence."

Addressing a roundtable session on higher education and European integration, he added that 'it is perhaps the right time to advocate for a European University College that creates synergy between the Bologna and the Copenhagen processes.'

According to Mr Calleja, statistical data from international and global reports illustrate that we live in times where mismatching, surplus of skills, lack of behavioural skills and automation are changing the ways in which higher education institutions are expected to prepare young and adult learners for the world of work: "The labour market is increasingly becoming challenging, demanding, unpredictable and skill-intensive".

Subthemes and other workshops

The main theme of the Annual Conference is 'Building Bridges and Opening Doors', using level 5 qualifications for more flexible learning pathways, crossing sectors and connecting stakeholders.

We have defined five conference subthemes, to be used for the workshops. They illustrate what has to be done in practice to reach the goals behind the main theme.

- A: Creating flexible professional development for level 5 programmes
- B: Supporting successful progression at all levels
- C: Successful employer engagement
- D: Cooperating with your suppliers of talent
- E: Opening doors to increase quality.

If you want to contribute to the conference by proposing a workshop or presentation please submit abstracts by the 19 January via info@leido.nl using the following format:

10.30 – 12.00 General Assembly CHAIN5

The GA will talk about practical issues that are important for CHAIN5 as a community of practice. In the next years this network will be more involved in 'how to use level 5 qualifications' in 'making lifelong learning more flexible'.

We want to discuss in the GA how the network can be extended. This is possible by the deployment of new members to the steering committee, the formation of thematic groups and the establishment of a register of experts who are prepared - within this community - to participate in international and regional activities.

It also calls for a discussion on the formal establishment of CHAIN5, the membership and the opportunity to work with national networks around level 5.

In the position paper are plotted the first lines. We would like to use the meeting to discuss the organizational consequences with the attendees and to look at the desired structure.
